Shifting paradigms: Redefining corporate health strategies from illness to wellness

"Shifting is the new smoking", emphasised Aishwary in his keynote delivery highlighting the urgent need for companies to prioritize employee fitness in today's sedentary world. This shift marks a departure from conventional corporate programs focused solely on supporting employees during sickness through insurance and benefits. According to a report by Harvard Business Review, "Every $1 invested in employee's fitness results in $8 direct tangible savings to the company through the reduction in health insurance premiums, incident related expenditure and reduction in absenteeism". Corporate India recognizes the value of its young workforce and emphasizes personalized fitness and wellness programs. Aishwary also highlighted internal data showcasing how organisations generated more savings by investing in comprehensive fitness and wellness initiatives for their employees. These investments lead to enhanced productivity, boosted morale, increased retention, and a healthier workplace."
